The purpose of this research practicum course is to provide students with an intensive apprenticeship in qualitative research methods focused on race, class, and equity. Under the leadership of the instructor, students in the practicum will design and conduct research in the Madison context working in collaboration with educational and community-based institutions. We will rely primarily on interviews, observations, and other forms of qualitative data to analyze issues of inequality using various forms of data analysis. In this course, we will collectively design the research, develop and refine research protocols, collect and analyze data, and prepare presentations on our research. Students will leave this course with a deeper understanding of how to design qualitative research; collect, manage, and analyze qualitative data, report findings, and work collaboratively on practice-based problems.
