

WELCOME TO UW-MADISON

The university traces its roots to a clause in the Wisconsin Constitution, which decreed that the state should have a prominent public university. In 1848, Nelson Dewey, Wisconsin's first governor, signed the act that formally created the university, and its first class, with 17 students, met in a Madison school building on February 5, 1849.

ACADEMIC FREEDOM

1894

“Sifting and Winnowing”

This quote was included in a report by the Board of Regents on Sept. 18, 1894, in response to accusations by a board member that Richard Ely, head of the UW's School of Economics, was a socialist and teaching utopian, impractical, or pernicious doctrines. After an investigation, Ely was declared innocent. In the statement, the Board of Regents introduced the concept of academic freedom by stating that the university should never censor or limit its members quest for knowledge. The following quote is now on a plaque in Bascom Hall. The class of 1910 dedicated the plaque to the UW.
